Life HACKS:

Cold & Flu Season

No one plans to get sick. When it happens, it can alter your daily life for up to a week or more. Listen to your doctor's treatment plan to help you get better. Here are some home remedies to help you feel better.

Stay hydrated.

Keeping your body hydrated can help to fight off a cold or flu virus. Drink plenty of water. Electrolyte drinks, like Gatorade or Pedialyte, can also help your body absorb the water.

Rest and drink warm tea.

Give your body time to heal. This helps your body focus on getting better. Warm herbal tea or lemon water can help soothe a sore throat and unblock sinuses. You can also gargle with warm salt water a few times each day.

Stay well this winter.

It's Important to Drink Water Even in the Winter

Our bodies are made up of 60-70% water, so it is important to keep yourself hydrated. As it gets colder, this may seem hard. The dry air from indoor heating can make you dehydrated and you may not even know. Staying hydrated helps keep our immune system strong, which is important during cold and flu season.

There are simple ways to make sure you are getting enough water during the winter. Carry a water bottle with you. This can help encourage you to drink more water. Add some flavor by putting a slice of lemon, lime or other fruit to your water. Drink warm fluids. Hot herbal teas, warm water or warm broths are good choices. Eat hydrating foods like oranges, celery or yogurt. Warm soups can also provide the water you need. Plus, it's a great meal!

Get Ahead of Migraines

A big step in coping with migraines is to find out what may be causing them. Causes are not the same for each person. Once you find them, you may be able to stop migraines before they start.

Keep track of your patterns and habits. Some helpful things to track are what you eat or drink and when; when and how long you sleep; the weather; and for those who menstruate, when you have your period. Track when your migraines or headaches start, how long they last and other symptoms you have. Note what medicines and other things help ease the pain.

Take these notes to your provider. Together, you can find what may cause your migraines. This information can also help know the best ways to help ease the symptoms once they start.

How to Support a Loved One Through a Difficult Diagnosis

It can be hard to get a life changing diagnosis or find out about a terminal illness. The news can feel overwhelming and difficult. There are no one-size-fits-all solutions, but if you have a loved one facing a difficult diagnosis, there are ways to support them.

Many times, we want to offer advice. Try not to say things that are out of your control, even if you think it will make them feel better. Saying that "everything will be fine" may make your loved one feel like they cannot share when things are not going well. Say, "I am here to support you" instead.

Find out what they need from you. Generally saying, "let me know how I can help" can be overwhelming. Offer specific kinds of help. Bring them a home cooked meal or do household chores.

If you offer help and your loved one does not want it, do not force it. Respect that they may need time and space. Still check in on them because they may want your help eventually.

Breathe Easier Indoors

When we think about air pollution, we often think of it outdoors. But air pollution levels can be just as high indoors!

There are several common indoor air pollutants. Radon is a naturally occurring gas that forms in soil. You cannot see or smell radon. Combustion pollutants are gases or particles that come from burning materials. Examples are space heaters, gas stoves and fireplaces. Volatile Organic Compounds (VOCs) are products like paint and common cleaners that emit chemical gases.

There are steps you can take to improve your indoor air quality.

1. When the weather is nice, open windows to let the breeze through. Check the outdoor air quality where you live at www.AirNow.gov first.

2. Limit your use of chemical cleaners or products. Or switch to less toxic products that have the Safer Choice label.

3. Vent your appliances like heaters and dryers outside. You can also install a carbon monoxide detector in your home.

4. Get your home tested for radon. Most states offer free or low-cost test kits. Find out how to get your kit at www.epa.gov/iaq and choose radon.

Managing Food Allergies During the Holiday Season

The holidays are a time to celebrate and often involve eating together. This can be challenging for those with food allergies. The more you know about food allergies, the better prepared you can be when planning meals. There are nine foods listed as major food allergens.

These include:

Milk

Eggs

Fish

Shellfish

Tree Nuts

Peanuts

Wheat

Soybeans

Sesame

While some food allergies are mild, some can be severe or even life threatening. Talk to the people you are spending time with this holiday season. Tell the host if you have a food allergy. Ask questions. Talk through the menu. If you are someone with a child who has a food allergy, talk with them before the celebration. Having a plan can eliminate some of the worry. Consider writing labels for each dish. You can also keep dishes with food allergens separate from the rest of the food.

Childhood Immunization Schedule

Vaccines, or shots, help protect kids from harmful diseases. To get the most benefit and protection, make sure your child gets the right shots at the right time.

The Centers for Disease Control (CDC) has a list of vaccines children should get and when they should get them. This schedule is based on when vaccines work best with kids' immune systems and when kids need the protection the most.

Many of the shots happen while they are infants. Often booster shots are needed months or years later. Some shots should be given each year, such a flu and COVID-19. If your child misses a vaccine or a booster, they won't need to start over.

If you have questions, talk to your child's primary care provider (PCP).

Talk to Your Teen About Vaping

E-cigarettes, or vapes, are the most used tobacco product among United States teens. Most vapes contain addictive substances. Vaping can cause lung damage and impact brain development. Often, teens vape because of peer pressure from friends or social media. A few signs of vaping include mood changes, faint fruity smells or increased thirst. It's important to talk to your teen about vaping.

Start by putting yourself in their shoes. Remember what it was like to be a teen. Find a safe, calm place to talk. Express empathy when talking to them. Try not to yell or pass judgement. It is key to be someone to count on and trust.

A way to help your teen avoid or stop vaping is to have them focus on something else. Encourage them to join a sport or after school club. They could try exercising, journaling, meditation, listening to music or playing games.

Supporting your teen is the best way to help them. Learn more at Teen.SmokeFree.gov.
